

ROBYN SHOTWELL METCALFE, PHD

Food Historian + Futurist
Author, Artist, Entrepreneur
Inquisitor, Athlete, Explorer

Food historian and futurist, with a concentration in the history of urban food markets, particularly in Western Europe during the 19th century. Why does a historian think about the future of food? It's all about context, having the knowledge about how we got here as we think about the future. I am particularly interested in the use of technology to improve and re-invent the global food supply chain.

DISSERTATION

"Cash, Commerce, and the City: The Smithfield Cattle Market in 19th Century London" (Dissertation Committee: Dr. Louis Ferleger, Dr. Charles Dellheim, Dr. Brendan McConville, Dr. Harriet Ritvo, Dr. Brooke Blower). I argued that the removal of Smithfield Market was a negotiated enterprise between private and public interests. The market's relocation provides a case study for the modernization of European cities during this period of rapid technological, social, political, and economic change.
